Growth in Africa, Decline in Europe

Africa will experience the world's biggest leap in population by 2050, with the continent's total population more than doubling, according to U.N. Population Division projections. But some African countries and regions will expand faster than others. Niger and Angola will grow the most, while North Africa and Southern Africa will see the continent's slowest growth. Europe is expected to see a 3 percent population decline, with countries such as Germany and Italy experiencing double-digit decreases.
